

Between the Full Stop and the Capital

Sentences, like people, need spaces to breathe.
Between the full stop
and the Capital
lies                      the pause.

Without the space,
sentences are breathless;
without the Sabbath,
life is restless;
without the pause,
the rest is lifeless.

Sentences, like God,
have a preferential option
for                      the pause.

Graham Kings
February 2007

